Two Lived Realities on Consumer Price Index

By Shomit Sirohi

Introduction

Althusser now captures his style of other editing as it is also called –

I. Poor lived life in Louis Malle shifted to labouring lives.
II. Wealth life captured in a recent film like Dazed and Confused.

Let us say we are free and the poor are helped – the whole argument synthesises statistically the difference – capturing everything as Consumer Price Index captures it as Althusser argues.

III. Lived Poverty on Consumer Index

In fact the poor live a different reality, they are in agrarian structures of lived consumption, which is also lived poverty in that form of life with meagre food and lacking wealth, and with minimum wage and even labouring on fields – can we say then that their consumption is recently better with CPIM struggles and such really needed action after class oppression for years – the Consumer index indicates such protests helping them but the lived reality is completely different – it is labouring consumption, labouring food rights and labouring wage rights. Poor labour markets in fact.

IV. Elite Lifestyles around Consumer Price Index

In fact one can tell, with olives, spaghettis, and even Nike and recently social networking based privates school and higher consumer index which then is finally in a lifestyle linked to the lived reality of in fact private companies and perhaps the richest affairs of life then is simply rich and elite and high class – its consumer index indicates this as wealth and consciousness to be fine and reading Latin Quarters as a fact.
